
Abstract
For individual patients as well as the general public, what is the laymen’s perception and understanding of certification? And how does the public’s awareness of the value of certification enhance health care? This article discusses the public’s understanding of certification and offers some best practices to increase this understanding.